

Christopher Columbus

Christopher Columbus was an Italian explorer. He is famous for discovering the New World. This involved sailing across the Atlantic Ocean from Europe to America. It was a journey into the unknown.

Columbus was born in 1451. He had three brothers and one sister. His father was a wool merchant and weaver. Columbus lived in the busy port of Genoa (in Italy). Boys in his town were often sent to sea to make money for the family.

Columbus wasn't much older than 10 when he first went to sea. He had to learn how to find his way by using a compass, the Sun and the stars. He also learnt about the wind and tides. Life at sea would have been exciting but dangerous. The sailors would have slept on deck no matter what the weather was like. The captain and officers would have slept in a cabin. The men sang prayers often as they thought it would keep them safe. The wooden sailing boats were always letting in water so the sailors had to work hard to pump the water back out again.

In 1476, Columbus arrived in Portugal. It is said that he had to swim ashore because his boat had been attacked by pirates. Others say it was because he had been shipwrecked. Whilst he was in Portugal, he met and married his wife. Their marriage did not last long as she died shortly after the birth of their son.

The people of Europe wanted to improve trade links with Asia. They wanted to be able to send ships to countries like India and China. Columbus thought that it was possible to reach China in just a few days by sailing west. Maps in those days made the oceans look smaller than they really were.

Columbus needed money to make this journey happen. At first, he asked the King of Portugal to help pay for the voyage. The King said no. He didn't think the small, wooden sailing boats could travel that far.

Many people laughed at Columbus. They said that the journey was impossible. Luckily, the King and Queen of Spain agreed to pay for the trip. In return, Columbus promised them spices, gold and new lands to rule.

On 3rd August 1492, Columbus set sail. Three ships set off on the voyage: the Niña (Spanish for girl), the Pinta and the Santa Maria. The ships were crewed by ninety sailors.

Food was kept in the hold. This included things like salted fish, cheese, wine, water, biscuits, dried beans and lentils. The voyage took much longer than expected. There was no land to be seen and the food was beginning to run out. The men were worried. They wanted to turn the boats around and go home.

Finally, land was spotted. On 12th October 1492, the men went ashore. They needed to find fresh water and food. Columbus called the land San Salvador. They sailed on to Cuba and Hispaniola (now called the Dominican Republic and Haiti). As this land was new to them, they called it the New World. People were already living there. Columbus called them Indians because he thought he had landed in the West Indies. Columbus claimed this 'new' land for Spain.

In 1493, Columbus arrived back in Spain. Only two ships returned. The Santa Maria had been wrecked on a reef on Christmas night the previous year. He had also left forty men behind because he wanted them to set up a camp. Columbus was treated like a hero. He had brought back new food and had also captured some of the native people.

Columbus returned to the New World again in 1493. This time he returned with seventeen ships. He discovered that the men he had left behind were all dead and the camp had been destroyed. People from Europe were beginning to travel over to America to start a new life. They treated the native people very badly. They wanted them to become Christians. These native people were made to work as slaves. Many died from illnesses brought over by the Europeans.

On his third journey, Columbus discovered South America. However, in 1500, he was sent home in chains after it was believed he had ruled Hispaniola to make himself rich. He was later released by the King of Spain.

On his fourth and final trip in 1502, Columbus spent time exploring Central America. He never did make it to China. Sadly, Columbus needed to be rescued during his final trip as his ships were leaking badly letting water in. Columbus returned to Spain as a sick man. He died in 1506.

Columbus was once thought to be the first person to discover these new lands. It has been estimated that 100 million native people were already living there. It is now thought that Vikings made the journey before him in 1000 A.D.
