

Character Description WAGOLL

Albus Dumbledore

As the door opened, a tall figure stepped into the room. Donned in a long flowing cloak, which dragged on the floor behind him, he moved tentatively forward. His face was creased with wrinkles, revealing his great age, but his eyes sparkled with an endless youth. On his head, a thin fabric cap was perched, the rim resting just above his unkempt eyebrows. His straight hair was long, falling either side of his face and down his back; it finished several inches above his waist. At the front, his beard was so long it was tied at the end with a thin, elaborately decorated cord. To complete the ensemble, he wielded an elder wood wand in his left hand. Along its length, at regular intervals, spheres could be found; they were made by interlinking strands that looked like roots. He raised the wand towards the prisoner.