But sometimes, when the penguins get to a particularly slippery slope...

they slide down it on their tummies, pushing themselves along with their flippers, always remembering to take care of their egg.

1) What parts of their body do the penguins use to slide down the slope?

Until one day he hears a chip, chip, chip.

His egg is starting to hatch. It takes a day or so, but finally the egg cracks right open - and out pops a penguin chick.

2) What makes the 'chip, chip, chip' sound?

3) How long does it take the egg to hatch completely?

Now the father penguin has two jobs to do. He has to keep the chick warm and he has to feed it.

4) What are the male penguins' two jobs?
