Everyone was so touched by Captain Tom's feat that, by his birthday, he raised more than 30 million pounds! He was sent cards from people all over the world, even from the Queen.

Tom's determination and courage took him from soldier to Captain. He was always there to raise his team's spirits. After the war ended, Tom left the army and built a family. He held a reunion dinner that went on for 65 years.

As his 100th birthday approached, Captain Tom decided to celebrate the event by walking 100 laps of his garden. He had just started walking when a global pandemic struck his country.

Tom was born in Yorkshire and from an early age showed a passion for all kinds of engines. When he was twelve, Tom found a broken motorcycle in a barn. He bought it, determined to fix it up and take to the road.

When he was 90, Captain Tom slipped during his daily walk and had to go to hospital. He left with a lot of gratitude for the nurses and doctors who took care of him.

Tom was working as an apprentice engineer when he was called up to fight for his country. When he was sent to India, Tom felt like he was in an entirely new world.

Captain Tom decided to make a new goal. He kept marching to raise one thousand pounds for those who took care of him and now were on the front line helping others: the healthcare staff.
